European Electronique boosts further education

Background

The Crescent Purchasing Consortium (“CPC”) has appointed European Electronique as a provider on the recently announced Desktop Hardware and Peripherals framework. This latest framework will run for a period of two years from April 2011 until April 2013.

The Crescent Purchasing Consortium (CPC) is owned and run on behalf of the Further Education Sector. The income generated from CPC collaboration is invested into facilitating better procurement in FE institutions. The CPC are committed to providing its members with a first class procurement service, which provides excellent value for money from contracted supplies and services.

Members have access to 548 professionally arranged contracts covering a wide range of goods and services. All contracts have a full audit history plus ultimately full cover for EU Legislation. The CPC now boasts 694 Further Education institutions (including Academies) in its' membership, these being located in a number of different regions throughout England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Yolanta Gill, CEO of European Electronique, said; “Having worked closely with the CPC in recent years we are delighted to have been selected under this framework for a further period of two years. This is an important framework for all Further Education Institutions and helps consolidate European Electronique’s position as a key provider to this area of the Education market”
